

‘Lying About Hitler’ By Richard J. Evans – A Refutation Of David Irving’s Dresden Firestorm Chapter

November 18, 2018 renegade 16 Comments

By John Wear

The Dresden raid was the perfect execution of the Bomber Command theory of the double blow: two waves of bombers, three hours apart, followed the next day by a massive daylight raid by more bombers and escort fighters. Only a handful of raids ever actually conformed to this double-strike theory, and those that did were cataclysmic... The fires from the first raid alone had been visible more than 100 miles from Dresden... many historians estimate that temperatures reached 1,500° Centigrade (2,732° Fahrenheit). Since temperatures in a cremation chamber normally reach only 1,400 degrees to 1,800 degrees Fahrenheit, large numbers of people in Dresden would have been incinerated from the extreme heat generated in the firestorm.

Lying About Hitler Book Review

British historian Richard J. Evans wrote a 740-page report to help defend Deborah Lipstadt and her publisher, Penguin Books, against a libel suit filed by David Irving in London. Evans's book Lying About Hitler is based on this report and attempts to show that David Irving has repeatedly engaged in the falsification of the historical record. Evans writes that much material from his report had to be omitted to keep his book to a reasonable length^[1]

In order to keep my analysis to a reasonable length, I will focus solely on Chapter Five of Lying About Hitler concerning the Allied bombings of Dresden.

Top: Deborah Lipstadt, Below: David Irving in front a poster titled 'Apocalypse 1945, The Destruction of Dresden'.

Dresden was a beautiful historic cultural city. Even today, Germans cannot freely mourn those who died nor the suffering of their traumatized parents who survived (as children).

POPULATION OF DRESDEN DURING BOMBINGS

Many conflicting estimates have been made concerning the number of deaths during the raids of Dresden on February 13-14, 1945. Richard Evans estimates that approximately 25,000 people died during these bombings.[\[2\]](#)

While exact figures of deaths in the Dresden bombings can never be obtained, some historians estimate a death toll at Dresden as high as 250,000 people. A major reason for the discrepancies in the estimates of deaths in the Dresden bombings is that the estimate of refugees in Dresden on the night of the bombings varies widely among historians.

Marshall De Bruhl writes in his book Firestorm: Allied Airpower and the Destruction of Dresden:

Nearly every apartment and house [in Dresden] was crammed with relatives or friends from the east; many other residents had been ordered to take in strangers. There were makeshift campsites everywhere. Some 200,000 Silesians and East Prussians were living in tents or shacks in the Grosser Garten. The city's population was more than double its prewar size. Some estimates have put the number as high as 1.4 million.

Unlike other major German cities, Dresden had an exceptionally low population density, due to the large proportion of single houses surrounded by gardens. Even the built-up areas did not have the congestion of Berlin and Munich. However, in February 1945, the open spaces, gardens, and parks were filled with people.

The Reich provided rail transport from the east for hundreds of thousands of the fleeing easterners, but the last train out of the city had run on February 12. Transport further west was scheduled to resume in a few days; until then, the refugees were stranded in the Saxon capital.[\[3\]](#)

David Irving writes in The Destruction of Dresden:

Silesians represented probably 80% of the displaced people crowding into Dresden on the night of the triple blow; the city which in peacetime had a population of 630,000 citizens was by the eve of the air attack so crowded with Silesians, East Prussians and Pomeranians from the Eastern front, with Berliners and Rhinelanders from the West, with Allied and Russian prisoners of war, with evacuated children's settlement, with forced laborers of many nationalities, that the increased population was now between 1,200,000 and 1,400,000 citizens, of whom, not surprisingly, several hundred thousand had no proper home and of whom none could seek the protection of an air-raid shelter."[\[4\]](#)

Image from Dresden Remembrance 2010

A woman living on the outskirts of Dresden at the time of the bombings states:

At the time my mother and I had train station duty here in the city. The refugees! They all came from everywhere! The city was stuffed full!"[\[5\]](#)

Frederick Taylor writes in his book Dresden: Tuesday, February 13, 1945 that Dresden had been accepting refugees from the devastated cities of the Ruhr, and from Hamburg and Berlin, ever since the British bombing campaign began in earnest. By late 1943 Dresden was already overstretched and finding it hard to accept more outsiders. By the winter of 1944-1945, hundreds of thousands of German refugees were traveling from the east in an attempt to escape the Russian army.[\[6\]](#)

The German government regarded the acceptance of Germans from the east as an essential duty. Der Freiheitskampf, the official German organ for Saxony, urged citizens to offer temporary accommodation:

There is still room everywhere. No family should remain without guests! Whether or not your habits of life are compatible, whether the coziness of your domestic situation is disturbed, none of these things should matter! At our doors stand people who for the moment have no home—not even to mention the loss of their possessions...[\[7\]](#)

Alexander McKee writes in regard to Dresden: “Every household had its large quota of refugees, and many more had arrived in Dresden that day, so that the pavements were blocked by them, as they struggled onwards or simply sat exhausted on their suitcases and rucksacks”. For these reasons, no one has been able to put a positive figure to the numbers of the dead, and no doubt no one ever will.[\[8\]](#)

However, Frederick Taylor writes that it was general policy in Dresden to have refugees on their way to the west within 24 hours. Fleeing the Russians was not a valid justification for seeking and maintaining residence in Dresden. Taylor writes that the best estimate by Götz Bergander, who spent time on fire-watching duties and on refugee relief work in Dresden, was that approximately 200,000 nonresidents were in Dresden on the night of February 13-14, 1945. Many of these refugees would have been living in quarters away from the vulnerable center of Dresden.[\[9\]](#)

Richard Evans also refers to the Dresden historian Friedrich Reichert, who estimates that only 567,000 residents and 100,000 refugees were in Dresden on the night of the bombings. Reichert quotes witnesses who state that no refugees were billeted in Dresden houses and that no billeting took place in Dresden’s parks or squares. Thus, Reichert estimates that the number of people in Dresden on the night of the bombings was not much greater than the official figure of Dresden’s population before the war.[\[10\]](#)

Reichert’s estimate of Dresden’s population during the bombings is almost certainly too low. As a RAF memo stated before the attack:

Dresden, the seventh largest city in Germany and not much smaller than Manchester is also [by] far the largest unbombed built-up area the enemy has got. In the midst of winter with refugees pouring westwards and troops to be rested, roofs are at a premium, not only to give shelter to workers, refugees and troops alike, but also to house the administrative services displaced from other areas...”[\[11\]](#)

The report prepared by the USAF Historical Division Research Studies Institute Air University states that there may probably have been about 1,000,000 people in Dresden on the night [of] the 13/14 February RAF attack.”[\[12\]](#)

I think the 1 million population figure cited in this report constitutes a realistic and conservative minimum estimate of Dresden’s population during the Allied bombings of February 13-14, 1945.

DID ONLY 25,000 PEOPLE DIE IN THE DRESDEN BOMBINGS?

If the 25,000 death toll figure at Dresden estimated by Richard Evans is accurate, we are left with the very odd result that Allied air power, employed for exemplary purposes to its full measure and with no restrictions, over an especially vulnerable large city near the end of the war, when Allied air superiority was absolute and German defenses nearly nonexistent, was less effective than Allied air power used to be in previous more difficult operations such as Hamburg or Berlin. I think the extensive ruins left in Dresden suggest a degree of utter destruction not seen before in Germany.

The Dresden bombings created a massive firestorm of epic proportions, and were not a botched mission with only a fraction of the intended results achieved. The fires from the first raid alone had been visible more than 100 miles from Dresden.[\[13\]](#) The Dresden raid was the perfect execution of the Bomber Command theory of the double blow: two waves of bombers, three hours apart, followed the next day by a massive daylight raid by more bombers and escort fighters. Only a handful of raids ever actually conformed to this double-strike theory, and those that did were cataclysmic.[\[14\]](#)

Dresden lacked an effective network of air raid shelters to protect its inhabitants. Hitler had ordered that over 3,000 air raid bunkers be built in 80 German towns and cities. However, not one was built in Dresden because the city was not regarded as being in danger of air attack. Instead, the civil air defense in Dresden devoted most of its efforts to creating openings between the cellars of the housing blocks so that people could escape from one building to another. These openings exacerbated the effects of the Dresden firestorm by channeling smoke and fumes from one basement to the next and sucking out the oxygen from a network of interconnected cellars.[\[15\]](#)

The vast majority of the population of Dresden did not have access to proper air raid shelters. When the British RAF attacked Dresden on that fateful night, all the residents and refugees in Dresden could do was take refuge in their cellars. These cellars proved to be death traps in many cases. People who managed to escape from their cellars were often sucked into the firestorm as they struggled to flee the city.[\[16\]](#)

Bundesarchiv, Bild 183-08778-0001
Foto: Hahn | Februar 1945

Dresden “Tens of thousands of dead were stacked on the streets of Dresden in high stacks of grates and burned, sometimes without identification”. Original: Illus/Hahn 2.12.50
Zehntausende von Toten wurden in den Straßen Dresdens in hohen Stapeln auf Roste geschichtet und, zum Teil ohne Identifizierung, verbrannt.

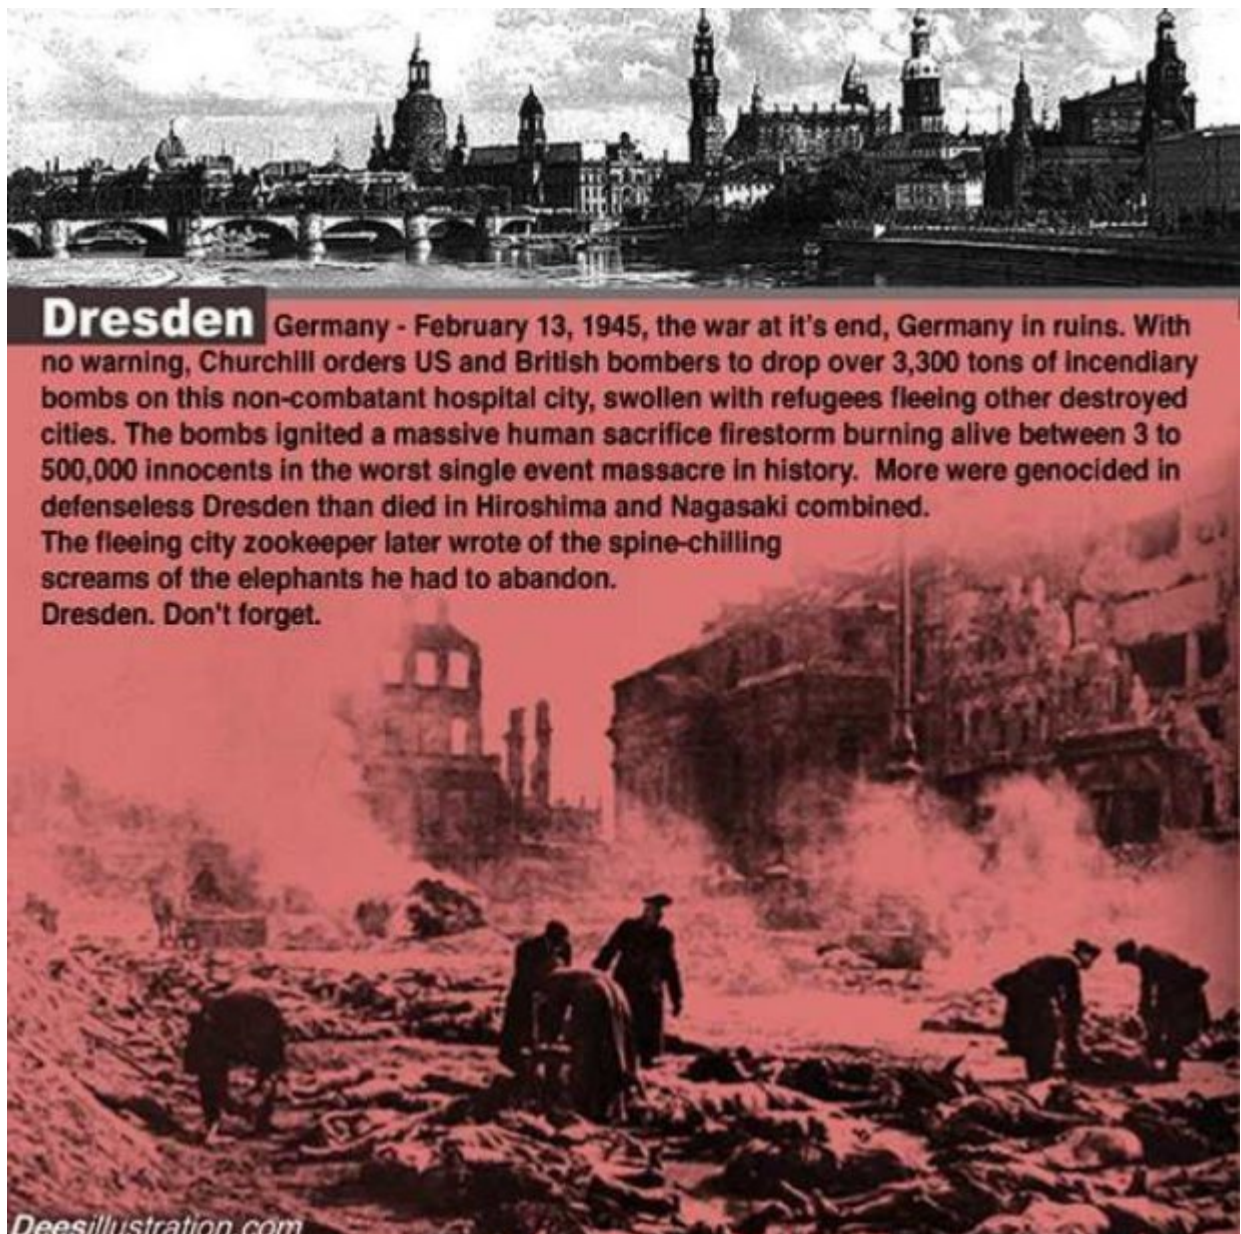

Dresden was all but defenseless against air attack, and the people of Dresden suffered the consequences. The bombers in the Dresden raids were able to conduct their attacks relatively free from fear of harassment by German defenses. The Master Bombers ordered the bombers to descend to lower levels, and the crews felt confident to do so and to maintain a steady height and heading during the bombing runs. This ensured that the Dresden raids were particularly concentrated and thus particularly effective.[\[17\]](#) The RAF conducted a technically perfect fire-raising attack on Dresden.[\[18\]](#)

The British were fully aware that mass death and destruction could result from the bombing of Germany’s cities. The Directorate of Bombing Operations predicted the following consequences from Operation Thunderclap:

If we assume that the daytime population of the area attacked is 300,000, we may expect 220,000 casualties. Fifty per cent of these or 110,000 may expect to be killed. It is suggested that such an attack resulting in so many deaths, the great proportion of which will be key personnel, cannot help but have a shattering effect on political and civilian morale all over Germany...”[\[19\]](#)

The destruction of Dresden was so complete that major companies were reporting fewer than 50% of their workforce present two weeks after the raids.[\[20\]](#) By the end of February 1945, only 369,000 inhabitants remained in the city. Dresden was subject to further American attacks by 406 B-17s on March 2 and 580 B-17s on April 17, leaving an additional 453 dead.[\[21\]](#)

Various estimates of the death toll go as high as 500,000. The Dresden raid was the perfect execution of the Bomber Command theory of the double blow: two waves of bombers, three hours apart, followed the next day by a massive daylight raid by more bombers and escort fighters. Many survivors including children were mowed down by bullets the following morning. Even Giraffes who had been released by their zoo keeper were mowed down before his eyes.

COMPARISON TO PFORZHEIM BOMBING

Richard Evans states that a death toll at Dresden of 250,000 is an impossibility:

Even allowing for the unique circumstances of Dresden, a figure of 250,000 dead would have meant that 20% to 30% of the population was killed, a figure so grossly out of proportion to other comparable attacks as to have raised the eyebrows of anyone familiar with the statistics of bombing raids, as Irving was, even if the population had been inflated by an influx of refugees fleeing the advance of the Red Army.”[\[22\]](#)

A raid that closely resembles that of Dresden occurred 10 days later at Pforzheim on February 23, 1945. Since neither Dresden nor Pforzheim had suffered much damage earlier in the war, the flammability of both cities had been preserved.[\[23\]](#) A perfect firestorm was created over both of these defenseless cities. These two cities also lacked sufficient air raid shelters for their citizens.

The area of destruction at Pforzheim comprised approximately 83% of the city, and 20,277 out of 65,000 people died according to official estimates.[\[24\]](#) Sönke Neitzel also estimates that approximately 20,000 out of a total population of 65,000 died in the raid at Pforzheim.[\[25\]](#) This means that over 30% of the residents of Pforzheim died in one bombing attack.

The question is: If more than 30% of the residents of Pforzheim died in one bombing attack, why would only approximately 2.5% of Dresdeners die in similar raids 10 days earlier? The second wave of bombers in the Dresden raid appeared over Dresden at the very time that the optimum number of fire brigades and rescue teams were in the streets of the burning city. This second wave of bombers compounded the earlier destruction many times, and by design killed the firemen and rescue workers so that the destruction could rage on unchecked.[\[26\]](#) The raid on Pforzheim, by contrast, consisted of only one bombing attack. Also, Pforzheim was a much smaller target, so that it would have been easier for the people on the ground to escape from the blaze.

The only reason why the death rate percentage would be higher at Pforzheim versus Dresden is that a higher percentage of Pforzheim was destroyed in the bombings. Alan Russell estimates that 83% of Pforzheim’s city center was destroyed versus only 59% of Dresden’s.[\[27\]](#) This would, however, account for only a portion of the percentage difference in the death tolls. Based on the death toll in the Pforzheim raid, it is reasonable to assume that 20% of Dresdeners died in the British and American attacks on the city. Richard Evans’s estimate that 25,000 Dresdeners died in the Allied bombings is an unrealistically low figure.

If a 20% death rate figure times an estimated population in Dresden of 1 million is used, the death toll figure in Dresden would be 200,000. If a 25% death rate figure times an estimated population of 1.2 million is used, the death toll figure in Dresden would be 300,000. Thus, death toll estimates in Dresden of 250,000 people are quite plausible when compared to the Pforzheim bombing.

Few appreciate the extent of indiscriminate saturation bombing campaigns across Germany.

HOW WERE THE DEAD BODIES DISPOSED?

Richard Evans asks:

And how was it imaginable that 200,000 bodies could have been recovered from out of the ruins in less than a month? It would have required a veritable army of people to undertake such work, and hundreds of sorely needed vehicles to transport the bodies. The effort actually undertaken to recover bodies was considerable, but there was no evidence that it reached the levels required to remove this number.”[\[28\]](#)

Evans does not recognize that the incineration of dead bodies on the Dresden market square, the Altmarkt, was not the only means of disposing dead bodies at Dresden. A British sergeant reported on the disposal of bodies at Dresden:

They had to pitchfork shriveled bodies onto trucks and wagons and cart them to shallow graves on the outskirts of the city. But after two weeks of work the job became too much to cope with and they found other means to gather up the dead. They burned bodies in a great heap in the center of the city, but the most effective way, for sanitary reasons, was to take flamethrowers and burn the dead as they lay in the ruins. They would just turn the flamethrowers into the houses, burn the dead and then close off the entire area. The whole city is flattened. They were unable to clean up the dead lying beside roads for several weeks.[\[29\]](#)

Historians also differ on whether or not large numbers of bodies in Dresden were so incinerated that they could no longer be recognized as bodies. Frederick Taylor mentions Walter Weidauer, the high burgomaster of Dresden in the postwar period, as stating there is no substance to the reports that tens of thousands of victims were so thoroughly incinerated that no individual traces could be found. Not all were identified, but—especially as most victims died of asphyxiation or physical injuries—the overwhelming majority of individuals' bodies could at least be distinguished as such."[\[30\]](#)

Other historians cite evidence that bodies were incinerated beyond recognition. Alexander McKee quotes Hildegard Prasse on what she saw at the Altmarkt after the Dresden bombings:

What I saw at the Altmarkt was cruel. I could not believe my eyes. A few of the men who had been left over [from the Front] were busy shoveling corpse after corpse on top of the other. Some were completely carbonized and buried in this pyre, but nevertheless they were all burnt here because of the danger of an epidemic. In any case, what was left of them was hardly recognizable. They were buried later in a mass grave on the Dresdner Heide.[\[31\]](#)

A Dresden rescuer searching for survivors.

Marshall De Bruhl cites a report found in an urn by a gravedigger in 1975 written on March 12, 1945, by a young soldier identified only as Gottfried. This report states:

I saw the most painful scene ever....Several persons were near the entrance, others at the flight of steps and many others further back in the cellar. The shapes suggested human corpses. The body structure was recognizable and the shape of the skulls, but they had no clothes. Eyes and hair carbonized but not shrunk. When touched, they disintegrated into ashes, totally, no skeleton or separate bones.

I recognized a male corpse as that of my father. His arm had been jammed between two stones, where shreds of his grey suit remained. What sat not far from him was no doubt mother. The slim build and shape of the head left no doubt. I found a tin and put their ashes in it. Never had I been so sad, so alone and full of despair. Carrying my treasure and crying I left the gruesome scene. I was trembling all over and my heart threatened to burst. My helpers stood there, mute under the impact. [\[32\]](#)

The incineration of large numbers of people in Dresden is also indicated by estimates of the extreme temperature reached in Dresden during the firestorm. While no one took the actual temperature reached during the Dresden firestorm, many historians estimate that temperatures reached 1,500° Centigrade (2,732° Fahrenheit).^[33] Since temperatures in a cremation chamber normally reach only 1,400 degrees to 1,800 degrees Fahrenheit^[34], large numbers of people in Dresden would have been incinerated from the extreme heat generated in the firestorm.

Historians also differ on whether or not bodies are still being recovered in Dresden. For example, Frederick Taylor writes:

Since 1989—even with the extensive excavation and rebuilding that followed the fall of communism in Dresden—no bodies have been recovered at all, even though careful archaeological investigations have accompanied the redevelopment.”^[35]

Marshall De Bruhl does not agree with Taylor’s statement. De Bruhl notes that numerous other skeletons of victims were discovered in the ruins of Dresden as rubble was removed or foundations for new buildings were erected. De Bruhl writes:

One particularly poignant discovery was made when the ruins adjacent to the Altmarkt were being excavated in the 1990s. The workmen found the skeletons of a dozen young women who had been recruited from the countryside to come into Dresden and help run the trams during the war. They had taken shelter from the rain of bombs in an ancient vaulted subbasement, where their remains lay undisturbed for almost 50 years.^[36]

CONCLUSION

The destruction from the Dresden bombings was so massive that exact figures of deaths will never be obtainable. However, the statement from Richard Evans that an estimated number of 25,000 people died in the Dresden bombings is almost certainly too low. Based on a comparison to the Pforzheim bombing and the other available evidence, a death toll in Dresden of 250,000 people is easily possible. Evans’s book Lying About Hitler does nothing to discredit David Irving as a Dresden historian.

To learn more about the Origins, Atrocities and Aftermath of WWII discover ‘Germany’s War’.

GERMANY'S WAR

THE ORIGINS, AFTERMATH & ATROCITIES OF WORLD WAR II

BY JOHN WEAR

ENDNOTES

[1] Evans, Richard J., Lying About Hitler: History, Holocaust, and the David Irving Trial, New York: Basic Books, 2001, pp. xi-xii.

[2] Ibid., p. 177.

[3] DeBruhl, Marshall, Firestorm: Allied Airpower and the Destruction of Dresden, New York: Random House, Inc., 2006, p. 200.

[4] Irving, David, The Destruction of Dresden, New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1964, p. 98.

[5] Ten Dyke, Elizabeth A., Dresden: Paradoxes of Memory in History, London and New York: Routledge, 2001, p. 82.

[6] Taylor, Frederick, Dresden: Tuesday, February 13, 1945, New York: HarperCollins, 2004, pp. 134, 227-228.

[7] Ibid., p. 227.

[8] McKee, Alexander, Dresden 1945: The Devil's Tinderbox, New York: E.P. Dutton, Inc., 1984, p. 177.

[9] Taylor, Frederick, Dresden: Tuesday, February 13, 1945, New York: HarperCollins, 2004, pp. 229, 232; see also Evans, Richard J., Lying About Hitler: History, Holocaust, and the David Irving Trial, New York: Basic Books, 2001, p. 174.

[10] Evans, Richard J., Lying About Hitler: History, Holocaust, and the David Irving Trial, New York: Basic Books, 2001, p. 174.

[11] Taylor, Frederick, Dresden: Tuesday, February 13, 1945, New York: HarperCollins, 2004, pp. 3, 406.

[12] <http://glossaryhesperado.blogspot.com/2008/04/facts-about-dresden-bombings.html>.

[13] Cox, Sebastian, "The Dresden Raids: Why and How," in Addison, Paul and Crang, Jeremy A., (eds.), Firestorm: The Bombing of Dresden, 1945, Chicago: Ivan R. Dee, 2006, pp. 44, 46.

[14] DeBruhl, Marshall, Firestorm: Allied Airpower and the Destruction of Dresden, New York: Random House, Inc., 2006, pp. 204-205.

[15] Neitzel, Sönke, "The City Under Attack," in Addison, Paul and Crang, Jeremy A., (eds.), Firestorm: The Bombing of Dresden, 1945, Chicago: Ivan R. Dee, 2006, pp. 68-69.

[16] Ibid., pp. 69, 72, 76.

- [17] Cox, Sebastian, "The Dresden Raids: Why and How," in Addison, Paul and Crang, Jeremy A., (eds.), Firestorm: The Bombing of Dresden, 1945, Chicago: Ivan R. Dee, 2006, pp. 52-53.
- [18] Davis, Richard G., Carl A. Spaatz and the Air War in Europe, Washington, D.C.: Center for Air Force History, 1993, p. 557.
- [19] Hastings, Max, Bomber Command, New York: The Dial Press, 1979, pp. 347-348.
- [20] Cox, Sebastian, "The Dresden Raids: Why and How," in Addison, Paul and Crang, Jeremy A., (eds.), Firestorm: The Bombing of Dresden, 1945, Chicago: Ivan R. Dee, 2006, p. 57.
- [21] Overy, Richard, The Bombers and the Bombed: Allied Air War over Europe, 1940-1945, New York: Viking Penguin, 2014, p. 314.
- [22] Ibid., p. 158.
- [23] Friedrich, Jörg, The Fire: The Bombing of Germany, New York, Columbia University, 2006, p. 94.
- [24] Ibid., p. 91. See also DeBruhl, Marshall, Firestorm: Allied Airpower and the Destruction of Dresden, New York: Random House, Inc., 2006, p. 255.
- [25] Neitzel, Sönke, "The City Under Attack," in Addison, Paul and Crang, Jeremy A., (eds.), Firestorm: The Bombing of Dresden, 1945, Chicago: Ivan R. Dee, 2006, p. 77.
- [26] DeBruhl, Marshall, Firestorm: Allied Airpower and the Destruction of Dresden, New York: Random House, Inc., 2006, p. 210. See also McKee, Alexander, Dresden 1945: The Devil's Tinderbox, New York: E.P. Dutton, Inc., 1984, p. 112.
- [27] Russell, Alan, "Why Dresden Matters," in Addison, Paul and Crang, Jeremy A., (eds.), Firestorm: The Bombing of Dresden, 1945, Chicago: Ivan R. Dee, 2006, p. 162.
- [28] Evans, Richard J., Lying About Hitler: History, Holocaust, and the David Irving Trial, New York: Basic Books, 2001, p. 158.
- [29] Regan, Dan, Stars and Stripes London edition, Saturday, May 5, 1945, Vol. 5, No. 156.
- [30] Taylor, Frederick, Dresden: Tuesday, February 13, 1945, New York: HarperCollins, 2004, p. 448.
- [31] McKee, Alexander, Dresden 1945: The Devil's Tinderbox, New York: E.P. Dutton, Inc., 1984, p. 248.
- [32] DeBruhl, Marshall, Firestorm: Allied Airpower and the Destruction of Dresden, New York: Random House, Inc., 2006, pp. 253-254.

[33] Alexander McKee cites estimates of 3,000 degrees Fahrenheit (McKee, Alexander, Dresden 1945: The Devil's Tinderbox, New York: E.P. Dutton, Inc., 1984, p. 176).

[34] <http://nfda.org/planning-a-funeral/cremation/160.html#hot>.

[35] Taylor, Frederick, Dresden: Tuesday, February 13, 1945, New York: HarperCollins, 2004, p. 448.

[36] DeBruhl, Marshall, Firestorm: Allied Airpower and the Destruction of Dresden, New York: Random House, Inc., 2006, p. 254.

Ladybug_lady2000

http://

Dresden was a real holocaust not this jewish lie of 6 million.

22 Reply

21 hours ago

Guest

Gerard Frederick

http://

How anyone dares to claim that 25000 people died in Dresden is explainable only by the indubitable fact that the history-scumbag is a liar as well as a psychopath without any conscience. Only a history-gangster can sink as low as this. One thing – Fieldmarshall Keitel ordered an in depth investigation into this atrocity; this extraordinary document has gone missing, when the Americans arrested him. I for one do not wonder why.

20 Reply

20 hours ago

Guest

Mr. Hilter

http://

The British and Americans had no problem with Hitler, it was the kikes who had lost their economic deathgrip of Germany and used their influence in British and American media and politics to fool the masses into hating their brothers. If I look to the future with these demons, I see ourselves as Russians in 1917 and Palestine today. They are going full steam with their anti semite nonsense. Just yesterday I saw an opinion piece in the Toronto Star talking about challenging overheard anti semitic comments, what was this writer's definition of anti Semitism? Merely saying Jews ran the banks and media. Interesting times are on their way.

19 Reply
22 hours ago

Guest

João José Horta Nobre

http://

It seems to me that when we speak of “victims” of World War II, has always missed the target as never or almost never said that it was precisely the most casualty of war nations. Nations (especially European ...) taken long as an inseparable component of humanity and the organic concept around it was by far the biggest victims of the conflict.

The defeat of the nationalist forces in the Second World War left the way clear for the “invisible hand” the high capital and Bolshevism, both internationalist and stateless persons would spread to almost unopposed throughout the world. In Western Europe, this spread has achieved a degree of extremely high social roots thanks to so-called “democracy” which in reality is nothing more than a cover and a very well-built scheme to deceive the most naive.

The high finance and Marxism are by their very nature supreme enemy of nations and all that they represent. The high finance aims at destruction of nations as a way to achieve anarcho-capitalist dystopia in which the state and the nation almost cease to exist in order to make way for a world governed by suicide laws of markets and controlled by a mini-elite who should live in a fantastic and away opulence of mortals remaining that exist only to serve this mini elite as a slave serves his master. The state will exist in a world so just to ensure that the control means of the slaves that have to be permanently supervised and brainwashing in order not to revolt.

The Marxist dystopia is not unlike the anarcho-capitalist dystopia promoted by high-finance (the extremes sometimes touching each other ...). Your ultimate goal is also the destruction of nations and the fanatic internationalism. In this world “golden” the state theoretically cease its existence and is to believe it would not take much to get back all the Stone Age, exceptuaria is naturally this a mini-elite on behalf of the “proletariat” would have the right to live in greater opulence, all in the name of “working people” obviously ...

Of course it is not necessary to be very smart to realize that who actually “calls the shots” in the current political system in which we live, is the high capital and that this same high capital has actors behind that aims to control the world. This “scheme” is already there in a water bath several centuries, but intensified greatly since 1945, because from that date the truly nationalist opposition in Europe was almost like eradicated, thus failing to be the one that was the only serious and credible resistance force to globalists ongoing projects placed by liberal and Marxist.

First, it must be said that the nationalist forces lost the Second World War and deserved to lose it, they behaved extremely unworthy manner, having committed the most horrible crimes against innocent civilians, absolutely unjustifiable aggression and sovereignty violations and any number of atrocities that can only be compared to those that the hosts of Genghis Khan carried out during their bloody conquests.

Of course, they also can not be forgotten the crimes committed by the victors of war, who were on a much larger scale and gravity of what until now has been recognized. Not only were the dropping of the atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki and the terrible bombing of Dresden. It was more. It is estimated that only state-unidenses soldiers have violated in all about 190,000 women passed by during their participation in the conflict. [1]

Now findada this tragedy in 1945 and subsequently tried and executed in Nuremberg part of those responsible for horrific crimes that had been committed, began a massive campaign in Europe (in fact it was more brainwashed ...) with the aim of demonizing the nationalist forces and put them all in the same bag with the German National Socialism however disgraced.

Fascism was transformed by the propaganda machines of the “democracies” and the Soviet Union, from day to night, the supreme enemy of freedom and humanity. The Soviets apparently forgot how they had been friends of the fascist forces until 1941 and even became famous the raucous parties between fascists and the staff of the Soviet embassy in Rome to begin the war (Fascist Italy was the first European country West to recognize the Soviet Union ...). The high finance based in Wall Street also seems that a certain point started to suffer from amnesia and has forgotten how maintained extensive relations with Hitler and his National Socialist comrades before the war.

After 1945 Fascism was transformed into the ideology that embodies evil, while simultaneously Communism enjoyed broad tolerance on the part of high finance forces, due to the simple fact that they do not seriously feel threatened by the Bolshevik enemy and occasionally even “sleep in the same bed”. This all happened and happens because Nationalism is the only ideological-political force that seriously frightens capitalists, as communists. This is due to the simple fact that the nationalists defend the continuation of nations, something that inevitably comes up against and is contrary to the intentions of internationalist communists and capitalists. To understand this strange alliance between the disciples of Karl Marx and the disciples of Adam Smith, just pay attention to the old saying that tells us that “the enemy of my enemy is my friend” . The creation of the European Union after the Second World War (started as the European Coal and Steel Community established in 1952), was an essential step to achieving the globalist elite interests that you want to destroy the nations of Europe. How moral is the basic foundation of any nation, followed up from 1960 the deployment of social engineering in order to destroy the morale of the people of Europe. The absolutely suicidal multiculturalism and cultural relativism, along with the moral relativism, have become a compulsory component of European education systems today do not differ in almost nothing of the teaching of a totalitarian country system.

The result of all this madness is now visible in the European nations, especially in that are located geographically the West. The ethnically European populations are getting aged and the ones who really seem to have concern reproduce and ensure their offspring are communities of immigrants in recent decades literally stormed the suburban areas of large European cities. This is not only a direct threat to the survival of Europe as a community of nations that share each other thousands of years of common history and absolutely unbreakable bonds of brotherhood, but also poses a direct threat of interethnic civil war, a real “bomb -Clock “ready to burst in a few decades ...

The demonization strategy of nationalist forces resulted as there was money to go keeping the “democracies” to work, or go shopping the electorate ...

The problem is that the capitalist mode of production suffers and always suffered cyclical crises they are a direct result of the contradictions inherent in the system. When the system goes into deep crisis, the only viable solution found by the “system” has been to find a new war, for war has historically been the best remedy for the crisis of capitalism.

Basically, the perversion of the “system” is quite simple to understand. The capitalist mode of production depends on the maximization of profit, because the more profit a given company is able to obtain, the greater its competitiveness. This maximization of profit is obtained by minimizing the costs, including reducing the minimum wages of workers to reach what we Karl Marx called the “minimum subsistence wage”, ie a salary so low and miserable that only allow the worker exist without any dignity or quality of life.

The contradictions inherent in the capitalist mode of production are so many and so deep that it is not at all surprising that it occasionally enters into crisis. On the one hand, the “system” requires wages as low as possible, ie, workers who live by with as little as possible, will have almost no purchasing power. But on the other hand, the “system” necessarily depends on consumption to achieve profit. The more than obvious problem is that if workers earn poverty wages, these will obviously not be able to consume and so the “system” comes easily in a crisis of overproduction, because from a certain point, starts to produce goods that simply they have no way to be sold because it will not be enough purchasing power in society to acquire.

What is the response of the “system” to the crisis of overproduction? It is basically always the same: if there is no need to produce as much, the “system” layoff workers thus increasing unemployment and consequently lowering the purchasing power. you enter so a vicious cycle that seems to have no end in sight: the overproduction leads to the breakdown of profit, this in turn leads to redundancies and these in turn lower the purchasing power of society leading to further redundancies and so on.

In desperation, governments under the umbrella of the “system” injecting money into the economy in the form of loans and other dodgy financial schemes, something useless and it just smacks temporary effects because the only way to truly remove the “system” of the crisis is increasing consumption in order to increase profit. This is how we come to the most tragic and ultimate solutions to the cyclical crises of capitalism: war.

War kills people, ie, automatically reduces the number of unemployed and destroys infrastructure, something ideal for those doing business in the construction and reconstruction industry. On the other hand, the arms industry is always an obvious winner in any war. Finally, the biggest winners of the war are always of high finance forces in a supreme perversion are who normally has caused most of the wars of the last 200 years and who later profits from the destruction, death and suffering caused by it.

The Second World War was the solution found by the capitalist mode of production out of the 1929 crisis and the bankers who financed Hitler, knew perfectly well that were filling the pockets to a lunatic who would soon get out of control. The period of high economic prosperity that followed the 1945 and lasted until the oil crisis in 1973 was a period of great economic growth allowed only by the need to rebuild that Europe faced after the Second World War. Without the war, it is very likely that this period had never registered and the Western economies after 1929 would have been stagnant for an indefinite period.

From 1973 to 2008, the “system” was up holding on despite some small cyclical crises. After 2008, it became clear that the capitalist mode of production has been shattered in the West, for the hand labor and the cost of living is too high and the system can no longer provide a satisfactory answer to the proletariat that suffocated by taxes , low wages, unemployment and high inflation, calls for justice with better living conditions. Everything leads us to believe that the “system” is already preparing a new war as a means of solution to the current crisis of capitalism and simultaneously as a means to deepen its internationalist project.

European nations, both for its historical and civilizational relief, as for its antiquity, are the last major bastion of resistance to the evil plans of high finance and Marxist forces. The visceral hatred spilled by these ideologies against the cause of nations is proof of how they feel threatened by those who are now the only serious opponents of the globalist project. We should not give them respite and never forget that this is a conflict that only end with the total annihilation of one party.

More here:

<https://historiamaximus.blogspot.com/2015/05/a-segunda-guerra-mundial-as-nacoes-e-o.html>

9 Reply
20 hours ago

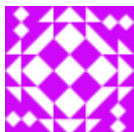

Member
Good Dictator

<http://>

You wrote: “First, it must be said that the nationalist forces lost the Second World War and deserved to lose it, they behaved extremely unworthy manner, having committed the most horrible crimes against innocent civilians, absolutely unjustifiable aggression and sovereignty violations and any number of atrocities that can only be compared to those that the hosts of Genghis Khan carried out during their bloody conquests.”

What are you referring to exactly? This is the point when I stopped reading your long and confused comment...

0 Reply
35 minutes ago

Guest
Don Hermiston

<http://>

Richard Evans is a typical court historian and his 25,000 estimates of deaths during the Dresden raid is taken from Allied propaganda during and after the war. Evans also believes or at least writes that Hitler's ultimate aim was world domination. This coming from a professor of history is laughable. David Irving, on the other hand, is a must read if you are at all interested in the history of The Second World War.

4 Reply
5 hours ago

Guest
Jeal

Audiobook of Apocalypse 1945
<https://archive.org/details/Apocalypse1945DresdenbyDavidIrving>

3 Reply
19 hours ago

Guest
Lord Mauleverer

No matter how often I read about this, the sense of horror, revulsion and shame never diminishes.

How can any so-called civilised country with an (apparently) educated citizenry, have got (and continue to get) it so wrong?

Has there ever been a more ignoble, perverted and cowardly cause, than to effect the wholesale slaughter of the finest women and children of our own race (in Dresden, Hamburg and myriad other German towns and cities) – the flower of humanity so to speak – in the most disgusting manner imaginable – and all in the name of the dark forces of International Financial Jewry and their insane campaign to destroy everything that is good in pursuit of the total enslavement of humanity and world domination.

I defy anyone, even in the darkest depths of your imagination, to come up with crimes worse than this, for such an impossibly worthless cause.

There is no excuse. There can be no forgiveness. Even to this day, the overwhelming majority of impossibly dumbed-down Brits still believe such inhumane acts were part of a just war and an essential part of the triumph of good over evil. The perpetrators, planners and participants of such criminal acts as Dresden are all lauded as “heroes”. It's truly shameful.

My word, we Brits (and Americans) have a day of reckoning to be heaped upon us, and whatever horror that may entail, it will be fully deserved and even then, will still not be able to make up for the acts of pure barbarism we carried out on our German brothers and sisters in the twentieth century (and beyond, of course, because the ramifications continue to this day).

3 Reply
4 hours ago

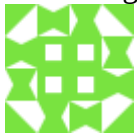

Guest
Lotti von Hesse

http://

This is the third time I've tried to type this – my comment keeps disappearing – thank you for your comment – there are estimates as high as 900,000 innocent German civilians being burned alive! That was just one city – these crimes against my honorable German people, must be exposed as much as possible! The sheer cruelty of these horrific fire bombings is SO VILE – Dresden was the most horrific inferno that I have read about, and saw on film footage! Please pass out copies of Hellstorm with Kyle's permission – Vielen Dank

3 Reply
3 hours ago

Guest
Konrad

http://

Kein Vergeben, Kein Vergessen! Unsere Zeit wird kommen.

2 Reply
10 hours ago

Guest
Lotti von Hesse

http://

I actually heard two American hags who bragged that they fire bombed my innocent German brothers and sisters! My blood is boiling, and these war criminals including the f-inf kikes, need to be exposed for the monsters that they were, and some of them are still alive, like that evil asshole, Harris from England! Those damn bomber pilots whether British, American, Jewish, Canadian, etc. are the biggest mass murderers and scum on the planet! They knew exactly what they were doing, and some people think only the damn jews did these crimes –

NO – it was white shabbos goyim for the most part – the kikes were just behind these horrific atrocities! Konrad, I know that you would never hurt defenseless women and children, and or the elderly, etc. Our German people were and are so awesome!

2 Reply
5 hours ago

Guest
Morningstar

<http://>

Wow! He must be really old now. If they can put 90 year old ladies in prison for not believing their lies, Harris should also be behind bars. Do you know if Bernard Clarke is still alive?

2 Reply
2 hours ago

Guest
Lotti von Hesse

<http://>

Those hags are hopefully dead by now – I met one in the 1980s, and the other bitch was from the early 2000s! I don't know about that Clarke guy, but hopefully, these bomber pilots are dead – good riddance to demonic garbage!

0 Reply
2 hours ago

Guest
Konrad

<http://>

The shabbos are weak and think there is some reward for their dirty work. Well, their reward for dancing with the devil is here now. Take a good, long look around WWII vets, our dystopia is your handywork, whether you knew or not.

1 Reply
2 hours ago

Guest

Lotti von Hesse

http://

Exactly, Konrad – I hope that there is a special place for them in a hellish nightmare in the afterlife! I would have never committed such atrocities, not even close – so I would have died, or been imprisoned by the damn jewish government!

0 Reply

2 hours ago

Guest

stefan

http://

Such noble Ulster Loyalists...for them firestorms are what one does to heretics...one notes that the 'Nationalist's' of the NF and BNP in Greater Britain who are,cohencidentally utter failures,still sport star of David flags at every meet making the EDL Communists absolutely predictable-in fact, just like Amerika's Zionists and Freemasons whose origin is the same island...the best punishment for them is for National-Socialism to reincarnate amongst the descendants of the Allies-as it will.This alone would make of the victims,martyrs which is exactly what todays maggot establishment dread.